

Hi! I'm Moa, a future Frontend Developer based in Sweden

My professional background might not start in tech, but it has shaped many of the skills that define how I work today. For several years I worked within the beauty and service industry as a skin therapist, trainer and clinic manager. In those roles I managed everything from marketing and social media to customer relations, business planning, events and team coordination.

Working closely with people taught me how to listen, understand needs and turn ideas into something tangible and valuable — skills that translate surprisingly well into building digital products.

My interest in technology and design has always been present. I previously studied graphic design and have long been drawn to the intersection of creativity, structure and problem-solving. Discovering frontend development felt like finding the perfect bridge between these worlds.

Today I am focused on developing my skills in HTML, CSS, JavaScript and modern web development, building responsive and accessible interfaces that combine clean structure with thoughtful design.

What I bring to a development team is not only technical curiosity but also a strong sense of responsibility, adaptability and collaboration. Having worked in fast-paced environments where no two days are the same, I am comfortable taking initiative, solving problems and continuously learning. I care deeply about user experience, visual detail and creating digital products that feel intuitive and enjoyable to use.

Right now I am looking for opportunities where I can grow as a frontend developer, contribute to meaningful projects and continue developing my skills alongside experienced developers.

If you'd like to collaborate or just say hello, feel free to reach out.
